Civil legal aid advocates participate in annual Louisiana Justice Community Conference

The Louisiana State Bar Association (LSBA) hosted the Louisiana Justice Community Conference in Baton Rouge on Oct. 18-19, where civil legal aid attorneys and advocates from across the state gathered to gain relevant poverty law training and to network and collaborate. In its 15th year, the conference focused on ways in which the justice community is “Fighting for Justice” and working to protect the rights of Louisianians, regardless of income, through the provision of critical civil legal aid.

“I think that the choice you have made to serve others and be in service of others through your professional career is something that is absolutely paramount in terms of us being able to change our role. First, [as stated by Bryan Stevenson] we need to think about getting proximate to the people and places where problems exist. You folks know better than anyone else that directly impacted people also hold within them the answers to the problems we are trying to solve. Folks that are most closely and intimately impacted by a problem are those who are the best able to solve it,” said ACLU Louisiana Executive Director Alannah Odoms Hebert in her keynote address.

Following the powerful keynote address, a diverse group of local and national presenters delivered relevant training on topics ranging from emerging issues in housing law to equal protection rights for LGBTQ+ people. In addition to the regularly scheduled programming, the Child in Need of Care (CINC) Task Force, chaired by Danika A. Benjamin of Legal Aid of North Louisiana, hosted a six-hour, pre-conference CLE program for CINC professionals. The Louisiana Bar Foundation also hosted its training for Grantee Board members and users of the statewide case management program.

During the conference, two awards were presented. The Legal Service Excellence in Advocacy Award was presented,

LIFT accepting applications for Flood Proof Project in Baton Rouge

The Louisiana State Bar Association's (LSBA) Legal Innovators for Tomorrow (LIFT) Incubator Program is accepting applications through Nov. 30 for a new collaborative project — the Flood Proof Project in Baton Rouge.

The purpose of the project is to increase access to civil legal help for low-income disaster victims to resolve their property problems and home ownership disputes in the wake of Louisiana's catastrophic flooding in August 2016.

To meet the continued demand for heirship and property title work by disaster survivors, Southeast Louisiana Legal Services, Louisiana State University Paul M. Hebert Law Center, Southern University Law Center, the ABA Center for Innovation and LSBA's LIFT have partnered to offer two attorneys the opportunity to develop and grow their own solo practices that address the need for disaster-related legal services.

The attorneys will develop their practices in a supported and collaborative environment.

During the 18-month project, attorneys receive a $10,000 stipend, free access to case management software and legal research programs, training, mentorship and court shadowing opportunities.

Louisiana licensed attorneys with zero-five years' practice experience who plan to develop or have begun to develop a sustainable solo law practice providing free and cost-effective legal solutions to disaster survivors are encouraged to apply. The program is looking for two attorneys. Email the application in one PDF document to Amy Duncan at amy.duncan@lsba.org.
