

Angela A. Allen-Bell is a native of New Orleans and 1998 graduate of the Southern University Law Center (SULC) in Baton Rouge, Louisiana. After law school, she spent ten years working at an appellate court and, in this capacity, gained an expertise in appellate law. In 2008, she went to work as a law professor (at SULC). In addition to her teaching responsibilities, she is faculty advisor to the SULC chapter of the National Lawyers Guild, an organization that acts to actively eliminate racism and maintain civil rights and liberties. Prior to entering law school, Bell served as a Program Director for the National Council of Negro Women of Greater New Orleans.

Professor Bell is a committed public servant who frequently lends her time to numerous causes involving at risk children and the indigent. She finds great solace in the written and spoken word. She writes and publishes poetry and scholarly articles about social justice issues. Additionally, Professor Bell engages in advocacy work and is regular speaker in her community, as well as for professional organizations. Her topics range from motivational messages to diversity and cultural competency talks to presentations about social and criminal justice or constitutional, civil or human rights issues.

Amongst her proudest accomplishments are her twenty-two year marriage to her best friend and her two incredible daughters. In Jeremiah 5:1, God said “give me one who seeks justice.” Professor Bell has adopted this call as her personal edict. Her signature trait is her never-ceasing desire to fight injustice.
