

Lauren R. Aronson is an Assistant Professor of Professional Practice at the Paul M. Hebert Law Center at Louisiana State University. She joined the LSU faculty to teach and direct the Immigration Law Clinic as part of LSU Law's Clinical Legal Education Program beginning in Fall 2015. The Immigration Law Clinic (the Clinic) aims to educate law students through the practice of law and to serve southern Louisiana's immigrant population in a multitude of ways.

Prior to coming to Baton Rouge, Professor Aronson was a teaching Fellow at Michigan State University College of Law, where she taught in the Immigration Law Clinic, and taught a Refugee and Asylum Law seminar which explored the contours of the international refugee definition, compared related forms of protection, and examined U.S. asylum procedure.

Before joining the academy, Professor Aronson worked as a Staff Attorney at the National Immigrant Justice Center (NIJC) in Chicago for both the Immigrant Children's Protection Project and the Immigration Legal Defense Project. Before that, she served as the Immigrant and Refugee Advocate at the Harvard Immigration and Refugee Clinic at Harvard Law School where her practice focused on gender-based asylum claims. In a past life, Professor Aronson was a tax law associate at Dewey & LeBoeuf, LLP's New York office.

Professor Aronson's research focuses on U.S. immigration law's treatment of immigrant children, particularly unaccompanied children and integrating service-learning into the traditional legal curriculum.

Professor Aronson earned a B.A. in Psychology and English from Rice University, and a J.D. from the University of Virginia School of Law. She is licensed to practice law in New York and is fluent in Spanish.
