

Hiroko Kusuda is Associate Clinic Professor and Director of Immigration Law Section of Loyola University New Orleans College of Law, Stuart H. Smith Law Clinic and Center for Center for Social Justice. Under her supervision student practitioners represent live clients before USDOJ's Immigration Courts and Board of Immigration Appeals, Department of Homeland Security (DHS), and federal courts. Professor Kusuda also trains her students to engage in administrative advocacy with federal and state agencies for their clients. Prior to joining Loyola Professor Kusuda was Detention Attorney for Catholic Legal

Immigration Network, Inc. (CLINIC), a subsidiary of U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, where she represented detained immigrants, managed CLINIC's Louisiana Deportation and Detention Representation Project, and provided technical assistance to Catholic diocesan immigration programs created after Hurricanes Katrina and Rita in the Gulf South region. Professor Kusuda is a frequent guest speaker and moderator at conferences and seminars on various immigration law topics. A long-time member of American Immigration Lawyers Association (AILA) and a mentor on removal defense and asylum law, Professor Kusuda currently services as the AILA liaison for New Orleans Immigration Court and co-liaison for U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement New Orleans District. She is also a member of Louisiana State Bar Association and Federal Bar Association.
