

Painting by Thomas Loepp, Collection of the Supreme Court of the United States

This painting of U.S. Supreme Court Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist was given to him by his clerks and it now hangs in the West Conference Room of the Court.

William H. Rehnquist † Sept. 3, 2005

The Chief at LSU Law

By Paul R. Baier

I think that a judge's disposition should be about evenly balanced between sail and anchor. He cannot be anchored to the past mechanically by a line of precedents, but by the same token he ought not to be moved by each puff of novel doctrine which may be generated by one group of litigants or another.

— U.S. Supreme Court Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist in a speech at LSU Paul M. Hebert Law Center

AN avalanche of snow shut down the United States Capitol. Across First Street, at the Rehnquist Court, it was business as usual.

Katrina knocked us down hard, but the day after Labor Day LSU Law was back on its feet. Such is our strength. Our stomachs were in knots, truth to tell. Chief Justice Rehnquist died the preceding Saturday.¹ Sadly, Jim Bowers and I paid our respects in the Law Review Seminar. Rehnquist's former law clerk John Roberts succeeds him as Chief Justice of the United States. Thus life gives our law reviewers and our courageous students another season — we have witnessed it ourselves — of hurricane, Court, and Constitution. "We are very quiet there, but it is the quiet of a storm centre, as we all know."²

As it happens, William H. Rehnquist was a great friend of LSU Law Center, visiting us twice a decade apart — first his Edward Douglass White Lectures in 1983, next his Alvin and Janice Rubin Lectures in 1993. For a Rehnquist tribute, nothing flowery will do. The Chief Justice was not a flowery guy.

One remembers well a few gold stripes on the Chief's black robe³ — a Rehnquist touch of Gilbert and Sullivan. As an Associate Justice, he let himself go. I remember seeing him in a loud orange tie and long sideburns during oral argument in what I call the Policeman's Long Hair Case.⁴ The Chief Justice voted with the Chief of Police, our students know.

For my little prayer, I will let The Chief at LSU Law do the talking. I will only set the stage.

William Rehnquist's courage held on to the very end. The New York Times photograph of a weakened Chief Justice of the United States swearing in President Bush in January 2004 sticks in memory. The news is very sad to those who knew him personally. All of his colleagues loved him. I have this from Justice Brennan. Justice O'Connor's tears on seeing the casket draped in the American flag being carried up the front steps of the Court touched

Chief Justice Rehnquist's last opinion is a triumph of brains, conviction, and time: "The question here is whether the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment allows the display of a monument inscribed with the Ten Commandments on the Texas State Capitol grounds. We hold that it does."
Van Orden v. Perry,
June 27, 2005.

hearts. Mama Dot, up from Gretna, saw O'Connor's anguish in the Advocate's photograph.⁵

Katrina wreaked havoc upon us and upon the nation. But we at LSU Law know that the death of the 16th Chief Justice of the United States is worthy of note. "An institution takes its tone from the top." This was Charles Evans Hughes's admonition to those who would lead. I can say from personal observation that William H. Rehnquist set Hughes's tone when he presided as Chief Justice of the United States during oral argument.

On the public side of the curtain, William Rehnquist was all Hughes — strictly business. On the private side, like Charles Evans Hughes, he was about as delightful as they come. His droll wit was a part of the man. He loved poker. He loved singing Christmas carols to Ron Martinson's piano in the West Conference Room. Justice Antonin Scalia is a nice foil. Il Guidice Sapiente likes the rough and tumble of the law on Mount Olympus. William Rehnquist would rather just get on with it. He was a Jobbist.⁶

Our Chief once skipped a State of the Union address to go to his painting lesson. He sat as a trial judge in Richmond, Va., for a change of pace. (His ruling was reversed by the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, say it softly.) He finished first at Stanford Law School, two notches above Sandra Day O'Connor. Justice Robert Jackson hired him as his law clerk.⁷

Looking back over 33 years, it is clear to me that Rehnquist's record reflects the wisdom of Robert Jackson: "There is danger that, if the Court does not temper its doctrinaire logic with a little practical wisdom, it will convert the constitutional Bill of Rights into a suicide pact."⁸

Chief Justice Rehnquist could surprise even Yale Kamisar. He could bow to the past, even to those precedents he condemned. He could say to Congress: "Thou Shalt Not Overrule Miranda." This is Dickerson v. United States,⁹ as we all know.

Cynics say that *Bush v. Gore*¹⁰ is a rotten egg begotten by Rehnquist & Co. That is not how I teach it. "Cynicism is the worst sin," according to Justice Frankfurter, whose constitutional sensibilities are part and parcel of Bush v. Gore and Chief Justice Rehnquist's Flag Burning dissent in Texas v. Johnson.¹¹

I remember seeing Justice Rehnquist walking briskly on the sidewalks of the Court when I was privileged to work inside the Court as a Judicial Fellow, a program Chief Justice Rehnquist strongly supported. This was exactly 30 years ago. I have grown up, so to speak, with William Rehnquist on the Court. He wore Hush Puppies, size 14D. He was a tall figure.

Later I urged him to deliver an Edward Douglass White Lecture at LSU. He added life to our learning. At a faculty luncheon, I thanked him very much on behalf of those of us who teach Constitutional Law for his majority opinion in United States v. Lopez.¹² I could tell from his laughter that he knew exactly what I meant.

The Court's work is arduous, and we in the law schools have all the fun teaching its decisions term after term, seeing the Court whole over time.

Chief Justice Rehnquist's last opinion is a triumph of brains, conviction, and time: "The question here is whether the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment allows the display of a monument inscribed with the Ten Commandments on the Texas State Capitol grounds. We hold that it does." Van Orden v. Perry,¹³ June 27, 2005. Thus a stricture of the Constitution is tempered with common sense. I am sure my precious friend and colleague Professor John Baker, who lost *Wallace v. Jaffree*¹⁴ but won Rehnquist's vote, is pleased and justly proud.

William H. Rehnquist wound up his E.D. White Lectures in LSU's Union Theater with three quotations and timeless insight. He quoted Thomas McCauley, the English historian of the 19th century, who observed to one of his American friends, "Sir, your Constitution is all sail and no anchor." What was William Rehnquist's reaction?

The stage is set. Here is The Chief at LSU Law:

I think that a judge's disposition should be about evenly balanced between sail and anchor. He cannot be anchored to the past mechanically by a line of precedents, but by the same token he ought not to be moved by each puff of novel doctrine which may be generated by one group of litigants or another.

Perhaps Polonius put it as well as anyone when he told Laertes, "To thine own self be true . . . , [and] thou cans't not then be to any man false."

Finally, whether it be denominated "common sense,” some patchwork of knowledge of the human condition gained from experience, or put some other way, the best judges undoubtedly have some sort of understanding of human nature and how the world works.¹⁵

And what of Louisiana’s Great Chief Justice Edward Douglass White, who was regarded by his contemporaries as having “an indefinable ‘plus’ which is very difficult to articulate”: —

Perhaps Edward Douglass White, whom these lectures honor, possessed that more general important quality of being a good judge — equally important for the effective discharge of many other positions of public responsibility —, the quality epitomized by Matthew Arnold’s description of Sophocles that he “saw life steadily, and saw it whole.”¹⁶

William H. Rehnquist saw life steadily, and saw it whole. Supremely, he was true to himself. Requiescat in pace.

FOOTNOTES

1. See Linda Greenhouse, “William H. Rehnquist, Architect of Conservative Court, Dies at 80,” The New York Times National, Monday, Sept. 5, 2005, A16–A18.

2. Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr., Law and the Court (1913), in Collected Legal Papers 291, 292 (New York, 1920).

3. Stephen Crowley’s poignant photograph in the New York Times, supra note 1, at A17, catches the Chief’s stripes and The Rehnquist Court for a last time.

4. Kelley v. Johnson, 425 U.S. 238 (1976).

5. See Gina Holland, “Rehnquist Lies in State,” The Advocate (Baton Rouge), Sept. 7, 2005, 2A, Associated Press Photo by Kevin Wolf.

6. The figure is Learned Hand’s, his “Society of Jobbists,” — “the mythical assembly of those committed above all to doing their jobs well.” Gerald Gunther, Learned Hand: The Man and the Judge 403 (New York, 1994). “And what were the standards for admission to this guild of Jobbists?”

It is an honest craft, which gives good measure for its wages, and undertakes only those jobs which the members can do in proper workmanlike fashion, which of course means no more than that they must like them. [Its work] demands right quality, better than the market will pass.

Id., quoting The Spirit of Liberty: Papers and Addresses of Learned Hand 62 (New York, 1960).

7. “The clerkship with Justice Jackson would be my first job as an honest-to-goodness graduate lawyer.” William H. Rehnquist, Introduction, A Law Clerk Comes to Washington, The Supreme Court 4 (Knopf, 2001). Chief Justice Rehnquist’s account of his job interview with Justice Jackson, id., pp.4–5, gives one hope: “I walked out of the room convinced that he had written me off as a total loss in the first minutes of our visit.”

8. Terminiello v. Chicago, 337 U.S. 1, 37 (1949) (Mr. Justice Jackson, dissenting).

9. 530 U.S. 428 (2000).

10. 531 U.S. 98 (2000).

11. 491 U.S. 397, 421 (1989) (Rehnquist, C.J., dissenting).

12. 514 U.S. 594 (1995).

13. 545 U.S. ____, 125 S.Ct. 2854 (2005) (Rehnquist, C.J., announcing the judgment of the Court and delivering an opinion, in which Justices Scalia, Kennedy and Thomas join).

14. 472 U.S. 38 (1985).

15. Lions Under the Throne: The Supreme Court in the Mirror of Chief Justices — The Edward Douglass White Lectures of Chief Justices Warren E. Burger and William H. Rehnquist 105 (Paul R. Baier ed., Louisiana Bar Foundation, New Orleans, 1995).

16. Id., at 106-07.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Paul R. Baier is George M. Armstrong, Jr. Professor of Law at Louisiana State University Paul M. Hebert Law Center. He was the Louisiana Bar Foundation’s Scholar-in-Residence in 1990-92 and was honored by the LBF as its Distinguished Professor in 2004. He is the editor of Lions Under the Throne: The Supreme Court in the Mirror of Chief Justices — The Edward Douglass White Lectures of Chief Justices Warren E. Burger and William H. Rehnquist (Louisiana Bar Foundation 1995). (LSU Paul M. Hebert Law Center, Baton Rouge, LA 70803-1000)

Journal Editorial Board Seeking Multigenerational Legal Families

The Louisiana Bar Journal Editorial Board is seeking the names of multigenerational legal families in Louisiana for a special issue. The board is interested in families with three or more generations of lawyers.

If you are from a multigenerational legal family, or know of one, you may mail, fax or e-mail the information to:
Publications Coordinator Darlene M. LaBranche
601 St. Charles Ave., New Orleans, LA 70130-3404;
fax (504)566-0930;
or e-mail dlabranche@lsba.org.

Include names of the family members, the relationships between them and a contact phone number or e-mail address.